[10]

Cyber terrorism is the premeditated use of disruptive activities or the threat thereof, in cyber space, with the intention to further social, ideological, religion, political or similar objectives, or to intimidate any person in the furtherance of such objectives. Computers and the internet are becoming an essential part of our daily life. They are being used by individuals and societies to make their tasks easier. They use them for storing information, processing data, sending and receiving messages, communications, controlling machines, typing machines, typing, editing, designing, drawing, and almost all aspects of life. The most deadly and destructive consequence of this helplessness is the emergence of the concept of cyber terrorism. The traditional concepts and methods of terrorism have taken new dimensions, which are more destructive and deadly in nature. In the age of information technology, the terrorists have acquired an expertise to produce the deadliest combination of weapons and technology, which if not properly safeguarded in due course of time, will take its own toll. The damage so produced would be almost irreversible and most catastrophic in nature. In short, we are facing the worst form of terrorism popularly known as 'Cyber Terrorism'. The expression 'cybercrime' includes an intentional negative and harmful use of the information technology for producing destructive and harmful effects to the property, whether tangible or intangible, of others. For instance, hacking of a computer system and then deleting the useful and valuable business information of the rival competitor is a part and parcel of cyber terrorism. The definition of cyber terrorism cannot be made exhaustive as the nature of crime is such that it must be left to be inclusive in nature. The nature of cyberspace is such that new methods and technologies are invented regularly; hence it is not advisable to put the definition in straightjacket formula or pigeons hole. In fact, the first effort of the Courts should be to interpret the definition as liberally as possible so that the menace of cyber terrorism can be tackled stringently and with a punitive hand. The law dealing with cyber terrorism is however, not adequate to meet the precarious intentions of these cyber terrorists and require a rejuvenation in the light and context of the latest developments all over the world.

The face of media has changed a lot and it has proved its efficiency. The media is actively involved in the national level affairs relating to the social justice, law and order and it has affected a lot the life of common man. Media is the fourth pillar of the democracy as it keeps people aware about the political turmoil on one hand and its pressures on the political leaders to show accountability to the people on the other. Media has played an extremely positive role by creating public opinion towards anything which evolves in our day to day life and cannot zeroed down. The demand of media has reached the heights of sky, it has its own set of limitation which does not yield any positive result. Nevertheless, media as a major voice of common people cannot be ignored and thrashed by some instances. The truth is that media acts as a major pillar and is also voice of poor people in a number of cases. Media has become the harbinger of development in removing the roadblocks by giving the information and knowledge in real terms without manipulating the essence of truth. However, media too suffers from pitfalls. Consumerism and materialism have adversely impacted media and given fainted colour to its professionalism. Often in fierce rivalries, ethics of journalism are thrown out of the window to settle old scores. In simple terms, Media is basically a bridge between truth and projection of any vices.

Kiran Bedi is a modern day hero in an age where heroes are few on the ground. Even before she became the first Indian Woman to join Police force in 1972, she had made her mark as a tennis champion, winning the Junior national Lawn Tennis title in 1966.

But it was a Police officer that she drew notice. Putting an end to the Akali - Nirankari riots in Delhi in 1977; Breaking up a 200-year _Old illicit liquor trade in the capital in 1979; earning the name 'Crane Bedi' and not a few critics for her penchant for to lering away illegally parked cars, especially those that belonged to the rich and powerful during the stint as DCP in 1981.

And almost famously, converting what was seen as a 'Punishment Posting' as Inspector General of Prisons into one that brought her glory and covered her name with roses for introducing New Age reform to Asia's biggest jail, the Tihar.

Through it all, she has come to stand for all that people expect of leaders; selflessness, social activism and Vision.

Governments come and go, the International world order might change, but you can bet your last rupee, that when all else fails, kiran will go on; turning her gaze to newer areas where reforms can be introduced, exhorting us to do better, give back more, for try harder.

It's a proud after retirement she is rendering yeoman's services to the people, keeping in mind that she is a human being ---- and others too.

The legal aid is very essential for the survival of healthy democracy which is founded on the basis of equality, dignity and worth of man as a valuable component of society. Legal Aid in modern legal, political and social theory is organically related to the urge of social justice. The concept of legal aid is the very spirit of equality and its movement is dedicated to the principle of equal justice to the poor. Equal justice of fair treatment within the purview of judicial process implies an easy access to courts and other governmental agencies on the basis of equality. Equal justice requires a systematic approach in response to the prevailing inequalities and injustices existing in our society. Legal aid is a vital limb of our Constitution and becomes, for this reason, an interpretative doctrine reflecting the desired fulfilment of the basic objectives of equality. The lawyer, as a part of a learned profession, has many obligations and duties of an honourable nature. Legal profession owes a moral and social obligation to the poor members of the society. The lawyers should take compassionate and humanitarian view in the present situation and galvanise their learning and professional skills to help the poor masses in our society. Again, legal services comprehend not only legal representation and assistance in litigation but also such other things as legal advice, arbitration, creation of legal awareness and assertiveness in the poor masses. Such actions can be accelerated if we utilise all possible human resources. The law students while learning in law school may render their services for the cause of the poor in the society, through Legal Aid clinics in law schools and universities. At present, legal aid is not a matter of charity but it can be claimed as a matter of right. The success of legal aid programme requires maximum participation by all persons- bar, bench and general public. Here the role of law courts, legal profession and law schools is very important. Thus, it is desirable that all persons connected with the administration of justice make vigorous efforts in this mass movement.

Q6) Read the following passage carefully and make notes on it. [10]

The essence of the rule of law is limitation of the discretion of officials, and providing a process by which errors or abuse of discretion can be corrected. Some discretion is unavoidable, because law cannot anticipate every eventuality or how to decide which law may apply to a given situation. What guidance the law cannot provide is supposed to be provided by standard principles of justice and due process, reason, and the facts of each case. Ideally, officials should be mutually consistent and interchangeable, making similar decisions in similar cases, so that no one can gain an undue advantage by choosing the official or exercising undue influence on the official or on the process he operates. We trust officials to exercise such discretion as they have, with wisdom, justice, and competence, to avoid government that is arbitrary, insolent, discriminatory, prejudiced, intrusive and corrupt.

Within the public sector, discretion can be exercised by legislative, executive, or judicial officials. Within the private sector, discretion may be exercised by private officials, such as agents, trustees or corporate officers, who are in principle subject to the supervision of the courts. The focus here is on judicial discretion, and the abuse of it.

The first major check on the discretion of judges was the jury. A judge, holding office over the course of multiple cases, and selected by appointment or election, is susceptible to undue influence. A jury, chosen by sortition, or lot, for a single case, just before the case, is less likely to be corrupted and having multiple jurors render verdicts collectively provides a check by each on the others. What they might lack in knowledge of the law is offset by their connection to the nonlegal environment in which most people subject to the law must operate.

In courts that try to save time and money by not using juries, such as family courts in some states, complaints about abuse of judicial discretion have led to calls for juries to decide questions of custody, visitation, child support, and the distribution of marital property.

Judges who impose lenient sentences, to avoid prison overcrowding and the early release of violent offenders, often provoke demands for mandatory minimum sentences or sentencing guidelines that reduce their discretion to do things like impose reduced sentences on defendants thought to be remorseful or unlikely to commit another offense.
